What if taking care of our environment were a more playful experience? What difference might it make in how we want to get involved and how we find our motivation?

Join Lucy Hawthorne, Founder and Facilitator of Climate Play, to explore a different way of thinking about climate change - with LEGO! Using LEGO Serious Play, we will explore our individual motivations for thinking about and acting about nature and climate change.

Less sitting around and talking - more about building stuff and then talking about it. Expect a very different kind of discussion about a serious topic - creative, honest, purposeful - and thoroughly enjoy ourselves in the process!

Kids from 8 to 80+ are all welcome

Lucy Hawthorne is Founder and Facilitator at Climate Play (www.climateplay.org), with a mission to boost environmental engagement - through play! After years of political lobbying and public campaigning, she now leans into a very different way of doing things, mashing together climate psychology and play learning as a way to unlock deeper, more creative and more honest climate engagement.

We will provide wine, nibbles and tea & coffee. Feel free also to bring what you want to drink. Contact Julian Gallop (jgallop@freeuk.com) for more details and (if you can) to let us know you hope to be there.
